Cyber is ranked the top risk of the day with digital rising and almost everyone owning a smart phone with risk assessed related to cybercrime to hit US$6 trillion by 2021? The arms race in cyber security is becoming more intense than ever! The greatest challenge organizations and governments are facing today is keeping up with the ever evolving cyber risk landscape. Hacking techniques are also getting more aggressive. Whether it is hacking tools from open source, malware, ransomware, machine intelligence coordinating cyber hacks or advanced data analytics that can launch large-scale attacks, the fight is inevitably AI vs AI.

Countering the various areas of cyber exposures requires not only vigilant risk management but also cybersecurity drills and diligence on correlating threat intelligence and collaborating within and across enterprises and industries.

From smart phones to smart homes, autonomous vehicles, health tracking, and purchases online; the range of offerings and services are increasing over a network - "XaaS" or "anything as a service" exposing businesses and transactions to unprecedented danger of cyber risks. Managing the unknown is a big challenge in the new world of IoT and BYOD where connected devices are used every single second that can inadvertently affect operations, networks, customers, and threaten business continuity and industrial infrastructure that can be catastrophic.

Can the immutable blockchain come to the rescue? However it contradicts with GDPR that requires records to be eradicated. How are the smart companies using new tech and strategies to combat cyber threats? What are the opportunities for the insurance industry?

Data breach management is an important aspect of today's digital economy. The idea that it happens only to other people or companies is almost an unacceptable business proposition to begin with in an economy heavily driven by personal data. In addition, there are legal regimes governing personal data protection in Singapore that companies are required to comply legally. This session will address the following:

- Data breach management as part of corporate governance;
- Regulatory reporting requirements in data breach management including critical information infrastructure providers in Singapore;
- Policy on Data Breach Notification in Singapore; and
- The interplay between coverage and exemption on cyber insurance.

K K Lim

Chair of Cybersecurity and Data Protection Committee, Law Society of Singapore

3.00pm

Panel on Managing Cyber Liabilities and Data Breaches

Panel will examine and explore different perspectives on the issues raised from the above session:

- How different financial institutions operating in different regions handle data breaches;
- What are some of the technical issues involved in data breach management; and
- While technical issues may be the same for data breaches, are they handled differently due to different legal regimes and if so, potential implications for data breach governance.

Moderator:

K K Lim

Chair of Cybersecurity and Data Protection Committee, Law Society of Singapore

Panelists:

Joey Pang

Vice President, Technology Operations & IP, Group Legal, Compliance & Secretariat, DBS Bank

Avin Rakhra

Vice President, Senior Counsel, Asia (ex-Japan), Deutsche Bank AG, Asia Pacific

Gino Bello

Managing Director, Computer Forensics, Technology, FTI Consulting
