The pandemic has highlighted deep-rooted issues in healthcare infrastructure and health inequities that have existed for many years.

Non-communicable diseases and the ageing population pose major challenges for governments, given tight health budgets. Affordability and accessibility are still two major concerns as half the world's population lacks access to basic health service and insurance coverage.

Is public-private partnership in healthcare the solution? How can technology improve the quality and affordability and achieve universal health coverage? And what role should insurers play? Are we doing enough?

Asia Insurance Review's Healthcare and Health Insurance conference will provide a platform for debate and discussion amongst insurance experts and leaders in the region's healthcare insurance industry, whilst bringing together senior management and top executives from the insurance and reinsurance companies, broking firms, regulators, pharmaceutical firms, hospitals, TPAs, healthcare providers and innovators to look at the critical success factors needed to address these issues.

- How to make health insurance attractive
- How the pandemic has driven health insurance
- Public health insurance
- Can health insurance be made viable?
- Coming from the claims end – tech
- Preventive steps in health insurance to keep insured healthy
- Success stories in health campaigns across the world
